Radcliffe is Harvard's Institute for Advanced Study. It is a cross-disciplinary laboratory of ideas that brings together students, scholars, and practitioners to engage with issues that can only be fully understood by drawing on research from across the humanities, sciences, social sciences, arts, and professions.

Radcliffe is unique among Harvard schools: Although we do not award degrees, we offer unparalleled opportunities for graduate students. Radcliffe provides learning and research experiences that are difficult to find in a traditional classroom setting. Radcliffe students work directly with our fellows and faculty, providing unique opportunities for mentorship, and they work across departmental boundaries, connecting with peers across the University. The Institute enriches the Harvard student experience by fostering interdisciplinary, engaged scholarship focused on the most pressing issues of our time.

Grant Programs

We invite Harvard undergraduate and graduate students to apply for summer stipends of $1,500 to support their research, service, and creative projects related to the topic of Harvard and the legacy of slavery or to the Radcliffe Engaged focus areas of 1) law, education, and justice and 2) youth leadership. Grant recipients will join virtual cohorts and receive mentoring and support from staff and faculty members and from each other. All summer grant applications are due by 12 noon EDT on Monday, June 8, 2020.

Click here to learn more about our 2020 summer grant programs.

Virtual Student Events

Virtual student events create opportunities for students to gain priority access to our speakers, connect and share projects with one another, and encourage students to reflect upon pressing social issues. Radcliffe will hold a series of these free virtual programs over the summer, and we welcome student participation. To receive invitations to these student-only events, sign up here.

To learn more about the Radcliffe Institute, visit www.radcliffe.harvard.edu.